An officer was conducting a business check behind a strip center. A truck was park along the side of the building close to Enterprise Rent-A-Car. Just behind the truck was a long extension ladder leading onto the roof. The officer circled the building and did not observe any other workers at this location. The officer returned to the truck and observed a male standing on the roof just above the ladder. The male came down and told the officer he was running a new cable from an electrical pole to the building. The officer looked into the bed of the truck and did not observe anything other than a small ladder. The male had a hand written work order as well as a map with work order directions. The male worked for an electrical company named "Otello" electrical. The officer obtained the males license and conducted a computer check. The return came back clear. All appeared to be in order at the strip center. The male continued to work and the officer resumed patrol.
